GROUP REFLECTION

In our roleplay, we showed the cultural differences between a Catholic boy (Jharyd) and a Muslim girl (Hannah) when it comes to courting and marriage. They have different beliefs, traditions, and rules, especially about relationships and marriage. Hannah's family strictly follows their Muslim faith, they won't let Hannah marry and have a relationship with a catholic unless Jharyd (a catholic) will convert to Islam. On the other hand, Jharyd follows his Catholic beliefs, he believed that it's okay to marry Hannah because he still plans to remain catholic. But, because of these differences and their strong religious faith, Jharyd's feelings for Hannah could not continue.

The communication challenges in the story happened when Jharyd was so desperate at courting Hannah even after she already explained her culture and limits. Even though Jharyd's feelings were pure and had good intentions, he did not fully understand how important Hannah's religious duties were. Hannah and her family tried to explain their side calmly and respectfully, but it was still hard because feelings were involved and Jharyd was not the one that is easy to give up.

As a group, we learned that intercultural communication needs understanding, respect, and acceptance. Love and effort are not always enough when strong cultural and religious beliefs are involved. We learned that the most important thing is to listen and respect each other's boundaries. In the end, Jharyd learned to respect Hannah's culture and accepted the situation. This showed us that respecting other cultures is very important especially if peace is what we want.
