SUMERIANS

The Sumerians developed cuneiform writing around 3200 BCE and Early people wrote with wedge-shaped marks on clay tablets. It was very important for keeping records, trading, and running their society.

EGYPTIAN

The ancient Egyptians invented papyrus, around 3000 BCE.Papyrus was used to create scrolls and documents, which made it easier to record and preserve information.

GREEKS

The Greeks developed one of the earliest known mechanical alarm clocks around the 3rd century BCE. It used a water clock mechanism to trigger an alarm sound at a preset time.

ROMANS

The Roman numeral system is one of the key contributions of the Romans to mathematics and This is important for record-keeping, helping to track debts, construction expenses, and the number of military personnel.